

Christopher Haave

Senior Director
Global Government Relations Office
RTX

Christopher Haave has a notable career in defense and government relations. He currently leads a team at Raytheon Technologies, managing relationships with key U.S. government offices like the Office of the Secretary of Defense and various military departments. His role is pivotal in aligning Raytheon's strategies with government objectives.

Previously, Haave directed Boeing's Global Trade Controls in Washington, D.C., handling trade policy and technology licensing with major government departments. He also served as Special Advisor on National Security Affairs to Vice President Dick Cheney, offering insights on foreign defense capabilities.

A U.S. Air Force veteran, Haave spent 26 years in roles linked to fighter aviation and political-military affairs. His academic achievements include degrees from the Harvard Kennedy School, New Mexico State University, and the U.S. Air Force Academy. Haave is also a Life Member of the Council on Foreign Relations, reflecting his deep engagement in international policy.